Rain, rain. Go away!

► London resident Ron Pokraka and his dog, Mags, break out the foul-weather gear yesterday for a walk along Dundas Street.

ANGELA MULLINS/METRO

This weather is a real wet blanket

London spent yesterday under a rainfall warning issued by Environment Canada. At least 50 millimetres of rain were expected to fall overnight, with strong winds and scattered showers continuing today. Rain will continue through Friday, with temperatures hovering near 10 C. The sun is forecast to emerge on Saturday, only to yield to more rain on Sunday.

Look, ma! Straight A's

- London maintains triple-A credit rating
- Toronto's rating sits at a tier below

Thirty-five years and still running. That was the story out of city hall yesterday as Mayor Joe Fontana announced London has again earned the highest possible credit rating — Aaa— from Moody's Investors Service.

So what does that mean? Mike Moffatt, an economist at UWO's Richard Ivey School of Business, sums it up this way: "It means if you loan London money, they're not going to go bankrupt. You're going to get your money back."

A municipal credit rating works like an individual credit rating, Moffatt says. Thanks to London's high marks, it can cash in on the lowest interest rate when borrowing money.

There is probably not much difference in interest — $100,000 to $200,000 a year — for cities with

"I think what's more important than the numbers is the signal. I think this is something that we can feel proud about."

MIKE MOFFATT, ECONOMIST, RICHARD IVEY SCHOOL OF BUSINESS

the highest bond rating compared to those that score the next tier down, Moffatt says. But the better rating still means taxpayers are getting a better deal.

In a statement from the mayor's office, Moody's cites council's 2010 tax freeze and the city's "prudent, conservative approach to fiscal planning along with a strong track record (of) achieving positive results."

Martin Hayward, London's chief financial officer, credits the rating to "fiscal discipline" and "long-term financial planning."

► David Rundle poses for a photo outside his northwest London home, which recently became part of the Ontario government's microFIT program. Readings from the "revenue meter" pictured above will determine how many kilowatt hours are being produced from solar panels on Rundle's roof and how much he will be paid for participating.

Going green, up top

► Rooftop solar panels not the right fit for all homes, but many in city likely qualify: Solar contractor ► Average approval wait time 6 to 8 weeks

ANGELA MULLINS
@METRONWS.CA

What's your roof done for you lately?

For David Rundle, the answer is about to become "made money."

Rundle is one of about 40 Londoners participating in the provincial government's microFIT program. Over the next two decades, he expects to bring in about $140,000 from solar panels that were recently installed on the roof of his home.

He likes the idea of getting paid to help Ontario create clean energy. Plus, it's upped his cool factor with younger members of his household.

"My (19-year-old) daughter thinks it's pretty neat," Rundle said.

The microFIT program started in 2009 as a major component of Premier Dalton McGuinty's Green Energy Act.

The "FIT" part of the program's name stands for "Feed-in Tariff." Homeowners sign a 20-year contract to collect energy — generally through solar panels on their roofs — feed what they take in to companies like London Hydro, and get paid a flat rate for every kilowatt hour they produce.

$800

The revenue forecast peaks in the summer at about $830 a month, and is lowest in December, at $300.

Right now, the going rate is 80.2 cents per unit.

While Rundle will still have to pay his monthly hydro bill, he will also get monthly cheques based on readings from the "revenue meter" installed on the side of his home. Rundle's not far enough into the program to have received a cheque yet, but an assessment of his home — prepared by solar contractor Efan Green and based on all sorts of mathematical calculations — shows he could bring in $520 in an average October.

Not everything Rundle's rooftop makeover generates will be pure profit. Going solar cost him nearly $60,000, covered with a line of credit that resulted from re-mortgaging his home.

"It's a risk because you don't know (exactly) what it is," Rundle said, referencing the fact that the program's still relatively new. "Usually, there's a little more reward when there's more risk."

Child-obesity discussion tonight

If you think a panel of research experts can't be intriguing, think again.

A Lawson Health Research Institute discussion lined up for tonight is more about you than the experts.

Childhood Obesity — Where It Starts and How We Stop It will take what David Hill calls a café scientifique approach to the issue.

Location

► The panel discussion called Childhood Obesity — Where It Starts and How We Stop It, is from 7 to 9 p.m. tonight at Windermere Manor, 200 Collip Circle.

"We will basically go with the flow," said Hill, the research institute's scientific director. "It's essentially owned and run by the people who attend."

Three experts, including Hill, will give 10-minute talks on the way childhood obesity is being addressed in the research world. From there, the direction the discussion takes is up to the audience.

The institute has several forums like this each year, Hill said. ● ANGELA MULLINS

COMRAGS TEACHES A LESSON IN LONGEVITY

LONDON STYLE

SARAH FRANCIS
METRO LONDON

In an era of throw-away threads, it seems like investment dressing has become a lost art. Where once people used to scour the sale racks in secret, we now brag about our scores at Winners, our Joe Fresh finds and our ability to throw together outfits for less than $100. We buy what we need for the moment and feel instantly gratified by having a sprinkling of the latest trends. And paying full price? I'll wait for Gap's Friends & Family Event, thanks very much.

And yet, I'm sensing a bit of a bargain-hunting backlash. Many of us have closets bursting at the seams with heaps of so-so clothes that we've gotten only because they're on sale. We end up buying more than we need (and often spending more than we have), all for the thrill of the bargain hunt. If only there were a patch for sale shopping ...

I chatted with Joyce Gunhouse and Judy Cornish, the Canadian duo behind Comrags, about their much-loved line of wardrobe "keepers."

The designers were at Saffron Road last week to meet their London customers and fête nearly 30 years in the fashion business. Gunhouse and Cornish approach fashion a little differently than most. Though they both studied fashion at Ryerson, it was the Sally Ann that taught them the most about fabrics, proportion and great design.

They would methodically take apart vintage couture pieces from thrift shops like the Salvation Army to really understand the workmanship of a great jacket or dress.

And their attention to detail shows: Experiencing their tailored blazers and sleek shift dresses, crafted out of high-tech yet easy-to-care-for and wearable fabrics, it's clear these pieces are ones you could love forever.

Gunhouse laughs, "We have a customer who keeps four of our black Wrigley dresses on permanent rotation."

"When you find something that works, you can wear it forever."

Cornish adds, "Comrags has never done trendy clothes."

"We try to make garments that can be reinvented so that they'll always be relevant to your wardrobe."

I tell the designers their clothes seem to reflect their personalities: Chic yet approachable. Gunhouse agrees: "Approachable — that's exactly it."

Timeless, approachable and not the least bit disposable.

Media's portrayal of violence to be discussed

RICHARD WOLOWICZ/GETTY IMAGES

► More than 500 educators, parents, students, and health and justice professionals will attend conference

From Don Cherry's Rock 'Em Sock 'Em DVDs to hockey fights that appear on YouTube seemingly before the combatants skate to the penalty box, violence in media is everywhere.

What can be done about it? That's the focus of a conference at Western today and tomorrow involving Canada's leading expert on concussions and a former NHL tough guy-turned-politician.

Dr. Charles Tator, a Toronto-based neurosurgeon, and Georges Laraque, deputy leader of the Green party and former NHL heavyweight, are featured guests at When Violence Becomes Entertaining: Recapturing Childhood and Adolescence from the Toxic Influence of Media.

Tator and Laraque will join Peter Jaffe from Western's faculty of education and former NHL referee Ron Wicks tonight for the opening panel discussion, Violence in Sports: Promotion in the Media.

"The purpose of sports is to build character and teamwork rather than glorify the violence that many in the media promote through highlights and DVDs," said Ray Hughes, national co-ordinator for the Centre for Addiction and Mental Health's Centre for Prevention Science.

"There are more fights than goals posted to YouTube for today's youth to watch over and over again. And that's just wrong."

The Thames Valley District School Board is sending more than 350 delegates as part of the board's Safe Schools initiative.

"We now understand

► Former NHLer Georges Laraque has been vocal about how much he disliked his role of hockey enforcer.

that to keep schools free of violence, we must deal with some of the underlying issues that promote problem attitudes and behaviours with our students, such as media violence," said Barb Sonier, TVDSB superintendent responsible for Safe Schools. ● METRO

Top court: Web link is not libel

► Ex-Green party campaign manager had launched actions against Google, Myspace.com, Wikipedia

The Supreme Court of Canada has unanimously upheld a lower court's ruling that linking to a website containing libellous material does not in itself constitute libel.

The top court ruled yesterday against Wayne Crookes, a former Green party campaign manager who argued that posting links to sites with defamatory statements was the same as publishing the defamatory material.

The website in question did not reproduce any of the disputed material, nor did it make any comment on it.

In its ruling, the Supreme Court said there

Huge win

There were concerns that a decision siding with Wayne Crookes would have a chilling effect on the web.

"The ruling is a huge win for the Internet," said Michael Geist, a University of Ottawa law professor who holds the Canada research chair in Internet and e-commerce law.

is a difference between simply linking to a website and actively encouraging someone to follow a link to a website with defamatory content.

"Making reference to the existence and/or location of content by hyperlink or otherwise, without more, is not publication of that content," the court wrote in its decision.

"Only when a hyperlinker presents content from the hyperlinked material in a way that actually repeats the defamatory content, should that content be considered to be 'published' by the hyperlinker.

"Such an approach promotes expression and respects the realities of the Internet, while creating little or no limitations to a plaintiff's ability to vindicate his or her reputation."

This is exactly why it isn't OK for police to investigate police.

There was never any doubt what the conclusion was going to be in this case. There is also no question that there are NO circumstances short of a loaded gun in plain sight that would make it acceptable for two 200-pound police officers to have to Taser an 11-year-old kid.

Occupying the porch

Gail Loveman's 11-year-old cat named Zeus usually stands tall and hisses when he sees a squirrel outside his owner's home. He wasn't as much of a tough guy when the animal on the other side of the glass was a mountain lion.

Loveman tells The Denver Post the encounter lasted five minutes before the mountain lion wandered off from her house near Boulder, Colo.

Loveman says she was in her home office last Thursday when she heard a

"We were all learning to share our stories together," Nicholas says. "There was no lead singer, or head songwriter. And if someone had a story to tell we'd help them do that."

With some encouragement from his close friend

"He kept pushing me — I never used to sing back then and he really got me to try new things," Nicholas says.

Building on Brunt's advice and his own passion, Nicholas started to write and record an album in his downtown London apartment with sound engineer Casey Wolfe. Drawing on a

Call him Boob, James Boob

► Comedian Rowan Atkinson reprises his role as bumbling British agent Johnny English

NED EHRBAR
SCENE@METRONWS.CA
METRO WORLD NEWS IN HOLLYWOOD

Rowan Atkinson, the venerable British comic actor, is known as much for his bumbling, near-silent Mr. Bean as he is for the witheringly sarcastic Black Adder. He returns to cinema this year with another of his characters, the blundering, very un-Bond-like British spy Johnny English. Bolstered by a surprising second life on DVD for the first film as well as Daniel Craig's revitalization of the franchise it mocks, Atkinson is hoping his spy has staying power. And if overseas box office receipts are any indication, it does.

The film has already had some impressive success around the world.

Yes, thank you. When you hear you're the No. 1 movie in Malaysia and Hong Kong and Indonesia and all these other places you think, Well that's curious. You know, these cultures about which I know absolutely nothing. Isn't it interesting that they can latch onto something like Johnny English Reborn and embrace it with as much enthusiasm as a British person would? Or Russia. I went to Moscow for a premiere there. That was fascinating — partly in fact from watching myself dubbed into Russian. I thought I sounded slightly effeminate, but maybe that's how they see the British. It's probably some kind of Russian subtext. "Make sure the Brit looks a bit effete."

Given the success of Mr. Bean and Johnny English, do you find people expect you to be a bit more dimwitted in real life?

Dimwitted? I'm not aware of that (laughs). Maybe I

Getting chaired

One of the biggest laughs in Johnny English Reborn is during a tense briefing with the prime minister when Atkinson fails to control the raising and lowering of his chair.

► "There are a number of things at play there," Atkinson says. "One is the simple contrast, really, between a very serious meeting between the prime minister and his intelligence advisors — including Johnny English — and the ludicrous ineptitude of someone who's not controlling their pneumatic chair. And yet no one seems to stop the meeting and say, 'Would you stop playing with that chair!'" disappoint them — either by not being dimwitted enough or being more dimwitted than they thought I was going to be. Sometimes you get a sense of expectation of comedy, of a comic persona. When they discover that you're not Mr. Bean or anything like him, or even quite different — I hope — from Johnny English, as long as you can be polite and engaging, they might excuse you.

Where did the idea of revisiting Johnny English come from?

When the first Johnny English movie came out, people thought it was a bit cheap and cheerful. A "yeah, OK, three good jokes but then what?" sort of thing. And then it rather bizarrely established this reputation as a kind of DVD movie that children in particular can watch over and over and over again. The second re-exploitation, as they say; the TV screenings and the DVD sales. And that's where Johnny English did surprisingly well. And I guess that was a lot of the justification for making a sequel, from a commercial point of view.

And Bond has been having a resurgence.

Yes, exactly. What's good, actually, about the Daniel Craig thing is not only is he good in the part but because they decided — I'm sure, quite rightly — to move it into a more serious vein, it kind of opened up the field a bit for us. Johnny English Reborn is probably a little more — although only a little — like a James Bond movie of 10 or 15 years ago, when you had more fun with it and more silly jokes.

T.I. remade Knock, knock, knocking on opportunity's door

► T.I. — the so called King of South — has bounced back after being incarcerated by writing a novel.

Spending most of the last two years behind bars usually disqualifies someone from labeling themselves a role model.

But T.I. — back after his latest release from confinement — insists that he's still the voice to help shape the youth for good, perhaps even more so after his well-documented struggles.

"I understand if you have your reservations of my history or my criminal record. But my question to you is, 'Who do you have that has a clean record, a clean image, never did drug, never toled a gun? Who else do you have that can speak to these kids and they'll listen to them? If not me, who?'" he said during a recent interview.

"I was actually making progress. I was doing good. I was touching lives and making a difference."

T.I. is hoping to pick up where he left off, both with his community service and his career. He was released from a halfway house last month following an 11-month stint in a prison in Arkansas. He landed there after he was caught with drugs in California, just a few months after almost a year of incarceration for trying to buy automatic weapons and silencers.

Civil rights leader Andrew Young, who has been a mentor to T.I., said despite the rapper's rap sheet, he has the potential to positively influence this hip-hop driven generation in a similar way that Martin Luther King Jr. did during the civil rights movement.

"He's always to trying to keep peace," Young said of T.I. "He does not cause trouble. He's been a victim of trouble. He's done some stupid things like buying guns. ... But that's the challenge of life. How do you live a smart and creative life without getting suckered?"

► Former Guns N' Roses bassist Duff McKagan a real Renaissance man
► Writes for ESPN.com, owns a wealth management company

In the years since Duff McKagan left Guns N' Roses and Velvet Revolver behind, he has emerged as something of a renaissance man. He writes about sports for ESPN.com, has his own wealth management company, Meridian Rock, for musicians, and now, is an author with the book, It's So Easy (and Other Lies). And he still rocks out with his group Loaded.

The book takes its name from a Guns N' Roses song, and details McKagan's triumphs and struggles. The Seattle-born rocker rose to fame in the late 1980s with Guns N' Roses, but would eventually become addicted to drugs and alcohol, until an epiphany one day changed McKagan's life.

The title of the book is It's So Easy, and yet it hasn't been so easy. What made it hard?

The band started to take off, and moving to L.A. was great. But I suffered panic attacks, young. And I found that drinking would dampen down the panic attacks. And I always thought to myself, "When I get up some free time, I'll deal with this," but as the band started to take off more and more, I got the panic attacks greater and greater, and I was drinking more and more. And then I found drugs, cocaine. I could drink more if I did cocaine, but cocaine would give me more panic attacks, and it would be this caustic kind of stew of action and reaction.

What made you change?

I found reason in the hospital. My mom — I'm the last of eight kids — had Parkinson's (disease) at the time. She came to the hospital, and she was suffering Parkinson's shakes and she was in a wheelchair. I'm the youngest son. I realized then and there that order of things was wrong. I was supposed to be taking care of her.

You have said that kickboxing turned your life around. How did that happen?

I looked like hell and there were boils coming out of my skin from drugs like leaving my body and this trainer said, 'There's somebody I want you to meet,' and they took me to this dojo ... He introduced me to sensei (teacher) Benny, and I could tell right away that he could see right through me, down inside of me and knew instantly.

How comfortable was it for to put your life in a book?

While it may seem like I revealed a ton in writing, you can reveal what you want to reveal. I keep my private life as private as I can. I revealed the important things as they relate to this book and the subject matter of this book.

You do quite a bit of writing, how did that start?

In 2008, I started writing for Seattle Weekly. I thought that maybe I would last a couple of weeks and I'd screw it up and they'd find somebody else. But I really found a voice and I like it. Those first two weeks turned into four, then six and eight. Now I'm there 170 weeks or something like that. After about a week, Playboy.com asked me to write a financial column because they knew I went to business school.

Now that you're a writer, what comes first?

Music takes precedence over everything. Writing is something you can do on the road, backstage, on the tour bus, on a plane. I get some of my best writing done on a plane.

Any chance Guns N' Roses would get back together?

Of course there's a chance. I don't know how real that chance is. It's not something I ever write about or talk.

Probation breach lands Lohan in cuffs

► Star taken into custody after judge finds her in violation of probation
► Bail set at $100,000

Lindsay Lohan has been taken away in handcuffs after a judge found her in violation of her probation.

Superior Court Judge Stephanie Sautner revoked Lohan's probation Wednesday after the actress encountered problems during her community service assignment at a women's shelter. Bail has been set at $100,000.

Sautner said Lohan would be entitled to a hearing before being sentenced to jail over the violation.

Lohan has started serving hours with the American Red Cross, but Sautner said that would not count toward her probation because it was not part of her sentence.

It's the latest legal problem for the 25-year-old Lohan, who remains on probation for a 2007 drunken driving case and a misdemeanor theft case this year. ● METRO

How to keep warm this winter

- Curling up with blankets and cups of cocoa is lovely — but not when it's necessary for indoor survival
- Here's a few tips for winterizing your home

DIY IDEAS

By following simple fall maintenance tips, you can save energy and stay warm this winter.

In every episode of 10 Grand in Your Hand host John DeSilvia shows homeowners how to cut up to $10,000 from their renovation and remodeling budgets by offering advice on new technologies and how-to information for doing it yourself.

large gaps.

After thoroughly cleaning the surface, use the new caulk and run a wet finger overtop for a smooth finish.

After drying for 12-15 hours, your windows are ready for winter.

Fireplace

Wood-burning fireplaces should be cleaned and inspected before winter falls.

This will prevent chimney fires and carbon monoxide poisoning.

Attic

Make sure the insulation in your attic is installed properly.

The vapour barrier should be facing down toward the living space, otherwise it will trap moisture.

Cut small holes along the vapour barrier to allow the moisture to escape.

Furnace

Always clean and replace filters in your furnace or heating system.

Have your gas heater or furnace inspected and serviced to avoid carbon monoxide poisoning.

Carbon monoxide and smoke detectors

Every fall, check your carbon monoxide detectors and smoke alarm and install fresh batteries.

A smoke alarm can save lives in a house fire.

Carbon monoxide is an invisible and odourless byproduct of burning oil or natural gas — the detector will sound if these levels get too high.

DINNER EXPRESS

EMILY RICHARDS
FOOD@METRONEWS.CA

Bursting with rich robust flavours of brown mushrooms and pecorino romano cheese, this risotto uses wild rice for a slightly different texture and flavour.

Preparation:

1 In saucepan, heat stock to a simmer. Then in a separate large saucepan, heat 15 ml (1 tbsp) of the butter and oil on high and cook until melted and bubbly. Add onion and cook until softened, 3 to 5 minutes. Add garlic and stir.

► This recipe serves four.

2 Add rice and stir to coat thoroughly. Add a pinch each of the salt and pepper. Pour wine over rice and cook for 2 minutes until some of the alcohol boils off.

3 Add 2 ladlefuls of hot stock to rice and stir well. Stir frequently as stock starts to boil off and rice begins to get soft. Add mushrooms.

4 Keep adding stock by ladleful, stirring every 2 minutes until all stock is absorbed and the rice is thoroughly cooked through. This will take about 30 to 40 minutes with brown rice. If you run out of stock, add a bit of hot water.

5 Add remaining butter, cheese and parsley; stir to combine. Divide equally among 4 plates.

'Direct and constructive'

- Federal mediator sees some hints of progress in talks between NBA and players union
- The two sides met for more than 24 hours in a 32-hour span in bid to end lockout

NBA owners and players ended negotiations Wednesday after more than eight hours.

Federal mediator George Cohen said the two sides would resume bargaining Thursday afternoon. Owners had to leave to attend board of governors meetings Wednesday evening through midday Thursday.

"The discussions have been direct and constructive, and as far as we are concerned, we are here to continue to help assist the parties to endeavour to reach an agreement," Cohen said.

The two sides met for more than 24 hours in a 32-hour span.

Without a deal this week, Commissioner David Stern might have to decide when a next round of cancellations would be necessary. The season was supposed to begin Nov. 1, but all games through Nov. 14 have been scrapped, costing players about $170 million in salaries.

Each side has formally proposed receiving 53 per cent of basketball-related income. The players got 57 per cent under the old deal.

Cohen said players and owners met in a variety of settings during mediation, sometimes in subcommittees, other times in groups as large as 40 people.

"Everyone is extremely focused on the core issues, the difficult issues that confront them," he said.

Stern left after talks surpassed the seven-hour mark to attend an owners' planning committee meeting at another hotel. He departed with Celtics owner Wyc Grousbeck, the planning committee chairman, and NBA president of league and basketball operations Joel Litvin.

Deputy Commissioner Adam Silver, the league's lead negotiator, and Spurs owner Peter Holt, who heads the labour relations committee, remained to lead the talks with players.

Stern hoped to bring a deal to his owners during their two days of board meetings; otherwise, he warned more games might be cancelled. Already 100 games have been lost.

Amore, Baby you are so good to me, I couldn't imagine life without you, ever! You've got the love I need & I want you to know I love you more today than I did yesterday! PER SEMPER

My Lovely Princess Missing those big blue beautiful eyes n smile of yours. Looking forward for big birthday party in less than two weeks. Keep your head up n don't forget to smile. :) haha..LOL PC

Pablo, We kinda talked in gr.9 but it was in Eng 10 when we really got to know each other and we never looked back. Its been over two years since we have been together & they have been amazing. It just sucks that I can't see you everyday like I use to since I'm in college and you are in high school but always remember one thing, "I L word you." BOB

Today's horoscope

♈ Aries March 21-April 20 Someone in a position of authority can threaten or bribe you, but you won't lose sight of your principles.
♉ Taurus April 21-May 21 You would be wise to watch your back over the next 24 hours. According to the planets, a rival is plotting.
♊ Gemini May 22-June 21 You may not want to give up on a project but you have no choice. It would take cash to keep going.
♋ Cancer June 22-July 22 Deep down, you know what must be done but you seem to be waiting for a sign. Trust your gut instead.

♌ Leo July 23-Aug. 23 You may be tempted to hold out for a better offer but that may not be such a good idea. Seal the deal.
♍ Virgo Aug. 24-Sept. 22 If you believe things will go badly, they may. You'll feel better when the Sun changes signs this weekend.
♎ Libra Sept. 23-Oct. 23 The best way to deal with someone who refuses to see sense is to let him or her go. He or she will learn.
♏ Scorpio Oct. 24-Nov. 22 In a matter of days, you will confound your critics and do something extraordinary.

♐ Sagittarius Nov. 23-Dec. 21 Give others the impression that you don't really care whether you win or lose — then strike.
♑ Capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 20 Don't dwell on your failures. You can't change the past so why waste time thinking about it?
♒ Aquarius Jan. 21-Feb. 18 Something seems to be bothering you deeply and your rivals have picked up on the scent of your fear.
♓ Pisces Feb. 19-March 20 Why are you trying to live up to an untimely image? Don't try to be someone else. SALLY BROMPTON
